We are gettin too far away from nature altogether, my buck. Hang the trains! and your steam-engines, too. Look what they ve done for our navy, my lad. They ve spoiled it, Tom. There s no navy now--none. All! I am sorry to see such a day my lad; we ve got no navy. Ain t you going to lock your door, uncle? Lock the door, boy, no! what for? If there s anyone got a better right than I have to what s there, Tom, shiver em! let em take it. Locks don t stop thieves, Tom. I never lock the door, cock, day or night. We got along very well until we arrived at New Cross. Here we met an unfortunate wretch who was in the toils of The Insidious Thief. His age may have been about fifty. He was coming towards us with heavy lurches, head foremost, and in a deplorable condition of insobriety. You had better port your helmet, my lad, or it will be the worse for you. Uncle Wood stood still, and I got into the road. The old sot came on and put his head fairly in the middle of Uncle Wood s breast, and commenced muttering some unintelligible words. I was afraid, boy-like, that Uncle Wood would have pushed him harshly away; but he took him gently by the arm and eased him off again on his blind and uncertain way. A tradesman...
